Expedia to Buy Vacation Rental Site HomeAway for $3.9 Billion

Expedia Inc. agreed to pay $3.9 billion to buy vacation rental site HomeAway Inc., capping a string of increasingly expensive acquisitions and moving more directly into competition with Airbnb Inc.

HomeAway, whose brands also include VRBO.com and VacationRentals.com, makes most of its revenue from charging property owners to list their properties on its sites. Unlike Airbnb, which lets residents rent out their homes for brief stints, HomeAway's listings tend to be managed properties and second homes rented out for most of the year.

Buying HomeAway gives Expedia more control of the lucrative market for apartments and vacation homes as Airbnb moves on traditional booking sites' territory. It also gives Expedia more inventory in vacation-rental destinations dominated by companies like Priceline Group Inc. and TripAdvisor Inc.

HomeAway has its roots as an offline destination for vacation home listings and has struggled in recent years to turn itself into a service for handling booking transactions. Expedia said it could help the company capture more business by combining.
