IV. Reading Comprehension (20%; 2% for each question)

Directions: Read each of the passages below and then answer the questions that follow.

Passage A

Complex carbohydrates include whole grains, vegetables, and fruits, which are high in dietary fiber. Researchers suggest there may be an association between increased dietary fiber and decreased breast cancer. It has been hypothesized that the reason behind this correlation is that the fiber binds to excess estrogen in the intestinal tract and is then excreted. Diets high in fat can promote the growth of intestinal bacteria that allows the estrogen to be reabsorbed into the body. Thus, a high-fat/ low-fiber diet decreases the excretion of estrogen, and women on this type of diet appear to be at an increased risk for breast cancer.

A good anticancer diet should include beans, grains, nuts, seeds, and brown, unpolished rice. Millet cereal is also a good source of protein and fiber. You can vary your diet by eating grains such as wheat, oat, and bran. Eat plenty of cruciferous vegetables such as broccoli, brussels sprouts, cabbage, radishes, cauliflower, kale, and collard greens.

Yellow, deep orange/red, and dark green vegetables and fruits, such as cantaloupe,

Passage B

If there's still another sequel to Grumpy Old Men, an appropriate place to film it might be a coronary care unit. So suggests the heart journal Circulation, which last week reported a study in which researchers tested 1,305 healthy men ages 40 to 90 for their ability to control anger and then followed them for seven years to see who had heart attacks.

Conclusion: In the grumpiest men, the guys who often feel like swearing and smashing things, anger more than tripled the risk of nonfatal heart attacks and fatal coronary heart disease, even after adjusting for smoking and drinking.

"Anger releases stress hormones like adrenalin, which increases the stickiness of the blood and can cause clotting in the coronary arteries and heart attack," explains the study's author, Ichiro Kawachi, an assistant professor at the Harvard School of Public Health. "The more often they are angry, the more they are at risk." Fortunately, the study also found evidence that even in the chronically grumpy, a daily aspirin lowered the heart disease risk, though only a moderate 15 percent. Kawachi also suggests stress-reduction strategies like meditation. And, better yet, "avoid situations that give rise to anger."
